Crawford & Company® Announces New International Structure

LONDON (March 18, 2016) – Global claims management specialist, Crawford & Company, has revealed its new international management structure, with a fully aligned 'G6' executive team and shared services leadership in place.

The G6 team reports to Ian Muress, executive vice president and chief executive officer (CEO), International, and comprises regional and country CEOs from the organisation's largest collective operations around the world.

Aligned with the G6 team are five heads of the international operation's shared services functions in client management, general counsel, technology, human resources and commercial operations.

"As Crawford® clients and stakeholders are aware, the Company has made considerable efforts in recent months to simplify its global structure and provide an increasingly competitive service to the market," Muress said.

"The new structure ensures that each aspect of our international business is fully represented at executive level, enabling rapid decision-making and tactical implementation up and down the chain of command," he said.

"The way I often describe the global capabilities of Crawford is that we 'join the dots.' We are a cohesive, joined-up organisation at both a local and global level. This is viewed as a key advantage by clients across the board, from insurance companies through to Fortune 500® companies. In an increasingly interconnected world, we are able to maintain our position as a truly global provider."
